

We Remember...

HAMMERSMITH'S SUBVERSIVE PAST

In the 16th century Hammersmith was a place of non-believers, with no churches but many taverns.

we'll drink to that!

In 1722, in the first count, there were 28 public houses in the Broadway area, one for every 150 residents.
The Bishop of London (from his nearby house at Fulham Palace) suggested burning heretics here to scare the locals
into going to church!

past tense people's plaques